this book addresses the technical and data related side of studying population flows provided by publisher

the field of urban economics is built on an analysis of housing prices land rents housing consumption spatial form and other aspects of urban residential structure drawing on the journal publications and teaching notes of professor john yinger of syracuse university housing and commuting the theory of urban residential structure presents a simple model of urban residential structure and shows how the model s results change when key assumptions are made more realistic this book provides a wide ranging introduction to research on urban residential structure topics covered range from theoretical analysis of urban structure with different transportation systems or multiple worksites to empirical work on the impact of local public services on house values and the impact of racial prejudice and discrimination on housing choices graduate students and scholars who want to learn about research in urban economics will find this book to be a good starting point the study contributes in analytical description of spatial diffusion of fertility in particular influenced by labour movements of people between places of residence and work it is assumed that the labour market has externality on the marriage market due to commuting which in turn affects fertility a model of spatial diffusion of fertility is based on assumption of global and local spillover effects the global spillover effect as shifts in fertility norms is motivated by increasing variance of social interactions of an individual when places of work and residence are different one local spillover effect is in response to flows of earnings across space another mechanism is related to expected changes in probabilities to find a partner affected by differences in day and night population the analytical model in which the effects on fertility of the cited spillovers are decomposed is constructed in the paper on the base of a model of the demand for children spatial stock flow model of a market and a matching model with a sex imbalance or spatial mismatch as the probability of matching three sex imbalances namely of night day time population and an adjusted to sex imbalance of commuters to residents are empirically tested empirical evidence on municipal swedish data for the period 1994 2008 does not provide any strong evidence of spatial diffusion of fertility however there are externalities of labour mobility on fertility due to changes of gender structure of population
